

Untitled document

File this one under "things that make you go hmm..."

I'm hearing through several sources that a Marcus Garvey biopic is indeed in development (all pending negotiations as one source says) that will be produced by

Don Cheadle's Crescendo Productions

, directed by

George Tillman Jr.

(

Notorious

,

Barber Shop

), written by

Sonni Kojo

the child of the late

John Henrik Clarke

, and starring

Kevin Navayne

(above photo) as the lead.

Relative newcomer Kevin Navayne's resume comprises of mostly TV work; in fact, he was scheduled to co-star in Spike Lee's Da Brick, which HBO passed on. His most recent stint prior to that was a stint on e.

To Liv

One Life

He's also spent a good number of years as a fashion model.

Marcus Garvey Biopic In Development (Don Cheadle Producing, Kevin Navayne Starring)

Written by Tombay IndieWire
Monday, 09 April 2012 13:57

I should note that Mr Navayne is originally from Jamaica, as was the character he just might eventually play on film - Marcus Garvey - was.

I'm not at all familiar with Sonni Kojo's scriptwriting/story-telling abilities; a Google search returned nothing, other than the fact that he's Dr Henrik Clarke's son. But given his lineage - son of a celebrated writer, historian, professor, pioneer - I'm curious.

Born Marcus Mosiah Garvey, Jr. on August 17th, 1887, in St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica, a biopic on the life of the controversial entrepreneur, Black Nationalist, Pan-Africanist, and powerful orator, is one that we've considered on S&A in previous posts, although nothing's materialized... until now it appears.

There was a 2 1/2 hour PBS documentary on Garvey, titled Marcus Garvey: Look For Me In The Whirlwind, directed by Stanley Nelson, which aired in 2000, and is currently on DVD. You could probably find it someone online as well.

Let's see whether this Cheadle/Kojo/Navayne project actually happens; when I have more info, I'll share... From Shadow and Act.