

Mariah Carey Set to be Next 'American Idol Judge

Written by Forward Times Staff
Tuesday, 24 July 2012 13:32

It's official... almost.

Mariah Carey will be the next "American Idol" judge, replacing J.Lo on the show.

If all goes just right, the singer will be making more than `id="mce_marker"7` million for one season.

At first, her hubby Nick Cannon, doubted the show had enough cash flow to fund the superstar's presence on the show.

"I don't know if they can afford Mariah Carey," Cannon told TMZ earlier as we reported. "That's a lot of money."

Let's not get too excited though. This isn't the first time she's been rumored to be the next judge. In 2010, thus was the same story.

In the meantime, another judge needs to be replaced. Artists like Nicki Minaj have even come up, but one diva is hoping to have her name called.

Aretha Franklin has publicly lamented her not being even called up for the gig.

She suspects with all of her experience and lovely personality, she should be the next judge. She even suggested other legends like Patti LaBelle.