

We distribute independent films on our own website and on a network of over 110,000 other affiliates that include giant portals like Comcast's Xfinity.com, Hulu, AOL and Yahoo; new locations for viewing like the Starbucks Digital Network; news organizations; non-profits; and bloggers and specialty sites of every kind and description.

That reach has allowed us to offer films on over 3 billion pageviews. Our site and network provide an access point to our library: more than 2500 award-winning independent titles from some of the greatest names in film, watchable for free and on-demand thanks to our sponsors.

In addition to enjoying so many great films on demand, we give you multiple ways to share, or "Snag," the movies you love with friends and family. Whether it's embedding a film on your blog or Facebook page, or e-mailing and Tweeting a link, you have the power to create your own digital movie network by sharing your favorites at the touch of a button. We also encourage you to join the conversation about our films and engage in our community – add comments on our site, post on our Facebook page, share with a "Like" or a Tweet, and rate each film, so your voice is heard. And, if a particular film moves you, enlightens you, even motivates you to take action, we provide a range of options on our film pages so you can get more information and participate – from volunteering your time to a cause, to donating to a charity, to spreading the film or the cause, or both. We call it "filmanthropy," and it's what happens when film goes beyond entertainment to engage and inspire audiences worldwide. It has allowed us to help thousands of filmmakers and charities, and to make a real impact (you can read some case histories here). We've put together a great hub on our website (click here) to help you get started
